

Boxed

Will They Find A Way (To Work It) Out?

In this timely and constructive format, Boxed is a unique social experiment in human conflict resolution. Featuring real disagreements, real mediation, and real solutions, two people with a serious dispute enter a specially designed box – and, whether it takes two hours or two days, they can't leave until they've got closure.

Once the participants are inside the box, each side of their story is revealed, and the mediator - who remains outside - uses screens to initiate joint discussions, individual conversations and various tasks. Nostalgic items, task props or phones appear from box's walls to stimulate resolution, along with clips, testimonies from family and friends, as well as Help, Time Out or Exit buttons.

Throughout the process, our expert offers viewers tools and insights to help resolve conflicts in their own lives, before addressing each of our participants in an emotion-filled final verdict. When the wall comes down and they finally come face to face, both sides – and the viewers at home – discover who remained committed to the Boxed resolution, and who has walked away...
